TREEPHONE No. 12.

HONGKONG, NOVEMBER 25TH, 1867. ONE of the lines of argument adopted by the Hon, A. P. MACEWEN in his speech on the Estimates was decidedly peculiar. Sir WILLIAM MARSH, then administering the government, in a speech he made at the end of 1886, sketched the financial position of the colony, present and prospective, and in the unexpected appearance of some masty doing so, referred to the extraordinary works | skin disease on his person. Neither is the then in progress and the amount that would fact of the clothes being ironed and got up crop of opium in the district of Ispahan alone is probably be required for their completion in in the unsavoury atmosphere of a Chinese 1888. The sum now actually asked for on | account of these works in the Estimates for next year is in the total about twenty per cent. less than that mentioned by Sir WILLIAM MARSH; one of the items is larger, tem is not provocative of more evil-in-this to Hongkong. There must be some special the others smaller. How this happens is not direction. Apart from this danger, there is lish market, for we believe a very small quantity explained. Possibly greater progress bas been made with some of the works in 1887 than was expected, and the expenditure has consequently fallen on this year instead of next; or it may be that there have been modifications in the plans, or that material dution to get up as wash the linen. death was contracted in Malacca, where Tungku has been obtained on more favourable terms. The fact remains, however, that on these particular items the sum now asked for less than it was anticipated it would be, and on this Mr. MacEwen argues that if an experienced auditor like Sir WILLIAM MARSH could be twenty per cent, out, looking two washed in sweeter water and ironed in a years shead, it is very probable the sum put clean and wholesome building. down in the Estimates a year later will probably not be required. If Mr. MACEWER were required to-day to estimate what personal expenditure during 1889 would be and he named a certain sum, at the end of 1888 modified his previous estimate in view of different circumstances that had arisen, the argument would be that because his first estimate was too high his second one must be too high also. His Excellency the Governor had some difficulty in following the reasoning based on such a complete non sequilur and those who read the hon, gentleman's speech would | dered by another sister or cousin. probably share that difficulty. How an experienced business man, speaking with the sense of responsibility he must feel in the Legislative Council, could advance such nonsense as this under the guine of financial criticism it is not easy to imagine. In Acheen (says the Straits Times) the enemy since the hard lesson given them on the 2nd October, have been keeping quiet for the present. From memorials recently presented to the Emperor one can gain a very good idea of the general direction taken by the disastrous flood which has issued from "the Curse of China;" though it is impossible to mark the exact area of inundated country, because of the fact that the boundaries of the Hsien or Districts are not delimitated on Chinese maps, and thus when one reads that the inundation has overflowed portions of such a Hsien, one caunot tell within perhaps twenty or thirty miles towhat point it has reached · Thirty-five miles due west of Honan's capital K'ai-fung Fu, stands the town of Chang Chow. marked on Williams' map as "Ching." ## THE LAND OF THE DALAI LAMA.

AN UNKNOWN LAND.

Thibet is an unknown land to all but a very few Huropeans. Although it berders our Indian Empire, the travelling public probably know more about Kamschatka, Mexico, or the North Pole than they do about Thibet. Yet it is a country teeming with matters of interest for all while the undeveloped resources of Thibet may, in the matter of trade, prove in the near future of extreme importance to India. It is, indeed, quite within the limits of probability that Thibet will share in the advancement which nations Mr. Balfour, speaking at Birmingham yester. and people are seeking, and that she will break: Thibet is a most remarkable country, and its

These avenues are nearly always filled with crowds of devout pilgrims, devotees who have come from great distances, and whose travel-soiled garments testify their long journeys. These pilgrims may be observed, with long Buddhist chaplete in their hands, telling their beads with the greatest fervour, and apparently oblivious of their surroundings. Among these groups may be seen a sprinkling of Lamas richly attired, and mounted on fine borses, splendidly caparisoned. These are Lamas of the Court, and their duty is to collect the alms of the faithful. Alas, sacerdotalism is everywhere the same!

It is said that strangers are readily allowed to visit the Dalai Lama, but as all visitors are compelled to prostrate themselves before him in worship, this would probably prove an insuperable objection to many Europeans. The Grand or Dalai Lama is the recognised political and religious head of all the Thibetan countries. There can be no election however till there are three candidates and of course no candidate is eligible for competition until after strict investigation and approval of the signs sought for. The shrubs of Lhassa are formed almost entirely of Robinson, "out" in three seconds, "Kicki gardens. In days far back the city had a wall Jimmy" was in excellent fettle. Sullivan and ramparts, but these have long ago disappeared. The houses in the town are lefty, being several stories high, large and handsome, and terraced with aloping roofs. They are mostly built of stone or bricks, elaborately whitewashed all over, excepting the borders over the doors and windows, which are painted red and yellow. These being the prevalent sacred colours, are accept, and he would knock "Kicking Jimm used for nearly every object that requires a coat of paint. The houses in Lhassa are painted and whitewashed annually and therefore always look clean. The interiors, however, do not correspond in this respect with the exteriors. Look into one of these Thibetan houses, and one is reminded of a whitened sepulchre; the rooms unswept, smokir, and dirty, littered and enounbared with a miscellaneous assortment of furniture, cooking, utensils, wearing apparel, and odds and ends-such a collection as only a Thibetan household could bring together. An orderly Thibetan interior would be a rarity. The poorer folk have their houses built of mud, but these also are completely whitewashed outside. This November -- For London-68,426 lbs. congou. whitewashing is done so well that it is at 9,576 lbs. scented crange pelce, 81,039 lbs. scenttimes difficult to tell what materials the houses ed caper, 26 bales waste silk, 2,000 boxes ginger are built of. Some of the huts are constructed, and 10 cases bristles. From Australia-35 cases

The Thibetans belong, as is well known, to From Lhassa right up to this mountain two the great Mongol race, and possess their peculiar facial characteristics—small contracted black ryes, high cheek-bones, pug noses, wide mouths, thin lips, and soanty beards. The ordinary complexion of the people is tawny, though among the upper classes there are many quite as fair as Europeans. In stature the Thibetans attain to middle height, and are agile, supple, and vigorous. They are exceedingly given to dancing, their movements in the dance being cadenced and easy. Gymnastic exercises are also very popular among them. As a race they are extremely frank and generous, and are so light-hearted that while walking about they are continually humming some popular song, or it may be a Bhuddist psalm. The men wear their hair long, allowing it to flow freely over the shoulders. The dandies of Lhassa are indeed exceedingly careful of their raven looks, anointing them freely with melted butter, and some of them go the length of braiding their hair like the women, and adorning the tresses with jewellery composed of precious stones and corals. The a desire to preserve public morality. In Lhassa, to be trammelled by custom, and one may meet women in the streets with their faces exposed, and much as Nature made them. But these women have the finger pointed at them, and are looked upon as black sheep in the fold. It must be confessed, however, that lamentable men's faces and the repulsive aspect it produces.

As a people the Thibetans are brave, and face death fearlessly. They are very religious according to their light, for one finds that religion enters largely into their everyday life. They are indeed superstitious, but not so credulous as the Cartars. Though they have many good -gard they place on cleanliness; in this respect in no wise prevents them from being fond of display, and rich and sumptuous clothing. The stracts of Lhassa like most eastern cities exhibit the same neglect of simple sanitary rules, and show the sad need there is for an energetic municipal hoard. The idea of connecting Lhassa with a municipality appears just now Utopian; but stranger things have happened. Lhassa may in time to come boast not only of a municipality, but of an elective Government, if only the British get a foothold there. Once let the British school-master get abroad in that laud.
